REACTIONS
THE SERIES

Reactions from our readers

The autobiography of Gerhard Ertl is a page-turner; it makes excellent reading for everybody interested in the history of science and certainly for those who want to know more about this Nobel Laureate.

Melanie Schnell, Kiel, in Angewandte Chemie

A laboratory thriller is Günther Maier's very personal description of the first synthesis of the highly strained tetra-tert-butyl-tetrahedran. Of high value is also the portrayal of the amount of freedom a traditional chaired professor had in panning and doing his research. I highly recommend this autobiography.

Bernhard Breit, Freiburg, in Chemie in Unserer Zeit

It's a delight to read Henri Brunner's autobiography. I had only briefly met him before, and this book gives me deep insight into his achievements and personality. Furthermore I learned a lot about the chemistry departments of the famous Munich universities, thrilling.

Sonja Herres-Pawlis, Aachen, in an e-mail to Eva E. Wille, Weinheim

Steve Kent's autobiography provides an insight into the achievements of this protein chemistry hero and it unveils his motivation for a lifelong "search for truth". The writing is vivid and lucid, the book is a wonderful addition to the bibliophilic designed series "Lives in Chemistry".

Ferdinand Hucho, Berlin, in BIOspektrum

Dieter Oesterhelt had discovered early in his career something fundamentally new: Bacteriorhodopsin (BR) that allows bacteria to use sunlight for energy conversion. BR plays a central role in Oesterhelt's autobiography that is part of the wonderful series "Lives in Chemistry"; this autobiography is presented in interview form with Mathias Grote as interviewer.

Ferdinand Hucho, Berlin, in BIOspektrum

These books are most impressive: From the material of the cover to the typographical detail each of the autobiographies is a true marvel that do not only appeal to the expert readers.

Silvia Werfel, Leipzig, in bindereport

The books in the series "Lives in Chemistry" impress with a clear structure, an attractive design, and a reader-friendly approach. Practical relevance is a common theme in Franz Effenberger's research and other activities. He combined the pleasures of chemical synthesis with a keen interest in fundamental structures and mechanisms.

Dieter Jahn, Hamburg, in Nachr. Chem.

Conveying specialized knowledge to non-specialists is a balancing act between precision and comprehensibility, and Horst Kessler has mastered this perfectly. The book is a recommended reading for everyone interested in chemical research in the broadest sense. It has great potential to inspire current and future generations of scientists to pursue bold and independent research.

Thorsten Berg, Leipzig, in Nachr. Chem.

This remarkable autobiography serves as a prime example that progress in the chemical and biochemical sciences can only be made if one applies new methodological developments to relevant problems. Horst Kessler's autobiography is recommended for PhD students as well as for all organic and medicinal chemists and biochemists. For the chemical science community this is a book filled with a wealth of information from the period when chemistry and biochemistry reconverged.

Martin Engelhard, Dortmund, in BIOSpektrum

Larry Overman's autobiography is a must-read for its timeless insights on building and leading a research group. This book is both inspiring and highly relevant for contemporary professionals.
